

Press Release

20something: A Patriot of the Arts! Sunday 11 March at 1.40pm, and 18 March at 1.05pm

If you're into the arts then you definitely shouldn't miss 20something as Namhla Ndlovu and Shashi Naidoo bring you all things arty for the next two weeks.

This week...

11 March at 1.40pm

You love reading? Then don't miss 20something fan Sipho's review of the book "The magic of thinking".

If snaps are your cup of coffee you should definitely not miss our chat with photographer Rupert De Beer about the world of photography. Rupert talks about his passion for photography and how he got involved.

We preview the movie "The Good Shepherd", which deals with how the CIA was formed from when the organisation was just a secret agency born out of American aristocracy in the 50's starring Matt Damon, Angelina Jolie and Robert de Niro.

We play out with K-OS's "Sunday Morning".

Next week...

18 March at 1.05pm

Considering a career as a Graphic designer, perhaps? 20something chats to Graphic Designer Palesa about her passion for her work. Palesa came up with the National Lottery's logo and has done impressive and extensive work in this industry. We find out why she first got interested in designing and what drew her to this art form.

Dance your way to the top! We chat to Daniel and Lucinda, two dancers who will be taking part in this year's FNB Dance Umbrella. We find out more about the inception of this internationally acclaimed dance festival and chat to them about their passion for dance.

We preview the movie "Marie Antoinette" starring Kirsten Durnst. Girls, apparently all the shoes Kirsten wears on the flick were designed by cult shoe designer Manolo Blahnik.

We play out with Simon Webb's "Coming around again".
